Jan 24, 2013 · A letter a week is good for mastery. But at preschool level you should include other letters at the same time. It's about exposure at this age and kids can understand more than they express. Brain research shows 5-7 letter groups work well for Kindergarten. 3-5 letters at age three, in my opinion for younger kiddos. I've been teaching 17 ...

Nov 22, 2009 · The age of your group of students will greatly affect what they should be tracing. For instance, children under the age of two should just be learning to hold a writing utensil and scribbling. This is because they are still developing the fine motor skills that are required for more complicated motions and are unable to control their movements.
